What is an Invertebrate? Animals lacking the vertebral column or backbone are referred to as invertebrates. From earthworms and sea urchins, to jellyfish and squids, around 95% of all living species on earth are invertebrates, which means mammals, amphibians, reptiles, birds, and fishes, all being vertebrates, make up only about 5% of the animal kingdom population.

Mottled Pug Eupithica exiguata exiguata. The diagnostic characters to look out for in the Mottled pug are, the dark elongated central wing spot, a series of small dark 'ticks' just beyond the spot 'pushing into' and causing a sharp kink in the pale cross band two-thirds of the way down the wing and two pale streaks towards the trailing edge.

Meadows are usually old landscape features and as such are likely to be surrounded by similarly old boundaries such as species-rich hedges, old stone walls or woodland. These further increase the wildlife diversity of the meadows themselves, as invertebrates, birds and mammals living in these marginal habitats spill over into the meadows in search of food.
